In December 2015, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) released data from a national survey of a representative sample of the U.S. adult population. Results showed that over 46 million adults in the U.S. do not have a usual source of health care. More specifically, the survey showed that 63.2% of Americans that lack a usual source of care do not use one because of cost. The survey queried the respondent's demographics as well as their ability to pay for care. Some of the questions were specific to sources of health care while others were more general regarding their ability to purchase insurance. Interpretation of Results It was discovered that the main reason that Americans lack a usual source of health care is because of their inability to afford care. Additionally, individuals with chronic illnesses are less likely to have a usual source of health care. This is surprising because one would think that chronic illness would be a driving force in needing access to regular health care. Finally, the survey showed that nearly one in four uninsured Americans were in the 17-26 age range. It is important to remember that certain policies like the Health Insurance Exchange will greatly impact the health care needs of these individuals. Important Takeaways It
